

SPECULATION SENDS WHEAT PRICES DOWN

Liberal Winter Wheat Movement Has Begun. European Prices Higher on Crop Reports—Corn Is Firmer.

New York, July 24.—Fervidness and unsettledness distinguished speculative trading in domestic wheat markets early in the week. Some of the selling at the outset was alleged to have been prompted by fairly abundant receipts of winter wheat at primary points. Part of this trading represented hedging sales against wheat bought at country points for shipment to Chicago and other centers. The deciding tendency was arrested in part by the somewhat stronger tendency toward European markets being strengthened by higher advices from India and Argentina as well as from France and Russia. Bad weather has prevailed in these countries recently and crop damage reports have been severe. In Russia spring wheat seems to have suffered seriously, just as it did here and in Canada, because of hot, dry weather.

It is estimated that the production in France will be about 40,000,000 bushels less than last year. In view of Europe's small yield, it is particularly unfortunate that we should have a short crop with practically no surplus available to spare for export. Canada will have a small crop, possibly not far from 70,000,000 bushels against 120,000,000 last year, and 140,000,000 estimated early in the season. In view of all these influences it seems probable that the Western European will find it difficult to secure ample supplies this season, even though much higher bids are made.

Hence it would cause no surprise to see further heavy reductions in the world's available supply during the next month or six weeks. For the total supply is about 20,000,000 bushels larger than a year ago. A few traders were inspired to ascribe the week's early weakness to reports that harvesting had begun in South Dakota and in northern Minnesota. This was a poor argument, as

WEEK IN COTTON IS MOST INTERESTING

Violent Fluctuations During Past Few Days Make Market Spectacular—Trading Heaviest for Many Months.

New York, July 24.—The past week was a most exciting one in the New York cotton market. It was especially during the first half of the week, when fluctuations were extremely violent, with trading the heaviest of months past. Following the previous week's sharp rise, there was a further advance on Monday, ranging from 30 to 35 points on the near months to 25 and 30 points on the new crop options. Forced covering of a much larger short interest in the July and August options than the trade had supposed to exist caused this, and in consequence the rise to new high record prices, together with the much less favorable reports on the progress of the new crop, precipitated the advance in the new crop months.

The Week's Rise and Fall. On Monday's rise, July went up to 6.55 cents a pound, August to 15.71, September to 14.00, October to 13.20, November to 13.00, and January to 12.50. This price of 15.71 cents for July was the highest reached in thirty years for either spot or futures, with the single exception of 7.12 established during a brief period in the height of the Sully boom of 1904-5. The last previous high price on this crop was reached on December 20, when the May option went to 16.46. A bear raid broke the market with great violence on Tuesday. It was the most aggressive attack and the sharpest break witnessed since the slump of nearly 300 points in the January collapse. July went down 80 points, August 60, September 37, and the other options 30 to 25 points. Resumption of strong support and an active trade demand from spot cotton dealers and millers interests later rallied the market and helped to close the general list firm last night, at prices ranging from 7 points' advance on September 21 and 24 on October, December, and January over last Saturday.

Record-Breaking Deliveries. There were 35,000 bales additional of actual cotton delivered Friday by the big shorts on their contracts for July delivery. This was the largest amount actually delivered on July contracts to date. The bull dealers have taken all the cotton up as promptly as it has been tendered, and it is understood that about 30,000 more bales remain to be delivered next Tuesday and Friday. The importance attached to this offset came into view in the manifesting of anxiety over less favorable reports during the week from the corn belt and the need of rain to carry out the promise for the crop. The fresh advance in the price of cotton also had to be considered, although the factor of speculative manipulation in that movement modified its importance.

STONE OF FINANCIAL MARKET UNSETTLED

New York, July 24.—Incidents of last week served to keep alive the attention of financial markets to unfavorable features in the conditions of business and to unsettle the speculative tone in the stock market. The power of resistance to depression has been at times by the market's testimony to the important progress made in speculation toward anticipation, the conditions now disclosing themselves, and to a disposition to count the possibility of a tendency toward improvement and correction. On the side of the crops, the spring wheat prospect has lost the foremost prominence which was given it by the government report of heavy deterioration during June. The weather conditions since have caused hopes of some betterment of the prospect. Also the offsetting advantage of the large yield promised for other grains, notably corn and winter wheat, have neutralized the influence of the spring wheat shortage. The important factor in the market's offset came into view in the manifesting of anxiety over less favorable reports during the week from the corn belt and the need of rain to carry out the promise for the crop. The fresh advance in the price of cotton also had to be considered, although the factor of speculative manipulation in that movement modified its importance.

COTTON THREATENS DANGEROUS BREAK

New Orleans, La., July 24.—Recent developments indicate that the cotton market this week will be an interesting and active affair, and there were many features on the closing days last week that appeared to promise greater developments during the week to come. Trading has been light of late, not because speculators have not been taking an interest in the situation, but because they have become over-cautious owing to the size of the operations in the old crop and the great danger that might ensue to every one should these operations go wrong. This pent-up speculation may break at any time, under the right conditions, and when it does, nothing can control it. This will be the last week of the now famous July deal, and it may be the wildest yet. Some sort of a settlement, either across the ring or in private, may be brought about between the longs and the shorts. Should the bulls refuse a private settlement and insist on shorts buying their covers in the open market, the greatest excitement may ensue, and what might actually be called a corner would be brought about.

Shorts will probably continue their strenuous efforts to find enough spot cotton to cover with and will rake over entire cottonbolls for supplies. In addition to this, the very indication on the week-end that the movement of cotton from the mills to New York would continue. A certain element among Southern mills is bitterly antagonistic to the bull clique, and is doing everything in its power to break its influence. From this element, unexpected tenders of spots against July contracts are coming. This is not likely to be as one-sided this week as it has been. To the surprise of the bulls Saturday's receipts of new cotton at Houston were forty bales, making ninety-four bales thus far this season, one of the largest movements of new cotton to Houston at the date on record, so far as statistics could discover. If this movement continues to increase it will have a decided effect on prices. The weather this week will be watched very closely. For some time Texas has had a drought, and under it, cotton is maturing fast in some counties. So far, however, no much longer, premature openings of bolls will result and the movement of new cotton will increase.

Oklahoma will be of more interest to the bear side of the market than any other State in the belt as the most optimistic crop accounts are coming from there. So far, however, no reports become that they have resulted in crop estimates for Oklahoma as high as 1,000,000 bales. The weather over Sunday will have more to do with the opening of the market than anything else, and buying for long in the market will increase if rains are reported in the Eastern cotton belt.

GIRL WEDS PIANIST; FATHER VERY ANGRY

Helga Ronne, Aged 18, Granddaughter of Philadelphians, Now Mrs. Hendricks.

Paris, July 24.—A romantic runaway marriage of the old-fashioned sort took place in a quiet church in Brompton, London, July 6, between Miss Helga Katinka Ronne, granddaughter of one of the wealthy Coppes of Philadelphia, and Francis Hendricks, a young American pianist, a pupil of five years past of Leopold Godowsky, head of the conservatory in Vienna. The bride is a daughter of Emil C. Ronne, formerly of Philadelphia, later residing with his wife's mother, Mrs. Cope, at 82 Avenue Bois de Boulogne, where the latter died, and now domiciled in Brussels.

The first knowledge Mr. Ronne had of the marriage of his daughter was derived from a formal notice in a Paris newspaper. He displayed very great indignation and challenged the newspaper's right to publish the announcement. Miss Ronne, who is very beautiful, and only eighteen years old, had stood, it is said, in great need of her father. She made the acquaintance of Mr. Hendricks, however, under the parental roof, where for many months he was warmly welcomed until the attachment between him and the young girl became so evident, that the complete change took place in the domestic atmosphere. Further visits on the part of the pianist were forbidden, and Mr. Ronne threatened to send his daughter to a Belgian convent if she did not absolutely relinquish her friendship for the musician. Seemingly she acquiesced in this decision, but late in June made a pretext of her desire to visit a young brother who is at school in France, to induce her father to permit her to come to Paris.

To Paris she did come, accompanied by a female cousin. The two women went shopping one day at the Bon Marche, and leaving her cousin in one part of the shop, ostensibly to make a purchase in another, Miss Ronne easily slipped away and proceeded to Versailles, where she met a woman friend who had agreed to chaperon her. Together these two went by a roundabout way to London. There the romance reached its climax. Since he has returned to his marriage the father has refused to have any communication whatever with his daughter, or even to permit her wardrobe or any letters to be sent to her from her former home. He has also threatened, it is said, to disinherit the young woman. Her father, however, ever, that she is entitled, now that she is married, or at least on her coming of age, to a large share in her maternal grandfather's fortune.

Mr. Ronne is reputed to have been comparatively poor when he married Miss Cope. His wife was the daughter of a Danish consul at Halifax, but he himself subsequently became a naturalized British citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks are passing their honeymoon in Paris, but intend before long to go to Denver, where Mr. Hendricks will open a music studio. The young man recently played with great distinction at a concert in Brussels. Several eminent painters have made portraits of Mrs. Hendricks, who is not only possessed of remarkable beauty, but is very highly accomplished besides.
